Khamla Soubandith is an advisor of Community Knowledge Support Association (CKSA), representing interests of indigenous people in Asia and Pacific Region and is an observer on the Forest Investment Fund (FIP) Sub-Committee. His mandate as an observer includes a network of Asia representing indigenous peoples. He has over 6 years of experience in awareness raising at national level on climate change and natural resources management and currently serves as a representative of indigenous people in the field of climate change, REDD+ and natural resource management. He believes that the Observers play a meaningful role in the workings of the CIF: “I feel strongly that the CIF has been quite open in getting us involved at the entry level of the decision-making process, where we are making interventions, making comments, and also offering our own ideas on some of the issues,” he says.
